Pharmacokinetics of clobazam and its active metabolite, 5-hydroxyclobazam, in humans. The pharmacokinetics of clobazam (CLB) and its active metabolite, 5-hydroxyclobazam (5-OH-CLB), were examined in 12 healthy male volunteers. The oral absorption of CLB (10 mg) was complete. Plasma concentrations of CLB and 5-OH-CLB reached a maximum by 2 h after administration. The t_{max} and $t_{1/2}$ of CLB were 1.5 +/- 0.4 h and 2.7 +/- 1.1 h, respectively. CLB and 5-OH-CLB were excreted with an average apparent total clearance of 6.4 and 9.4 ml/min/kg, respectively. CLB was detectable in urine for a mean of 96 h. CLB concentrations in plasma and urine were significantly correlated. The mean CLB and 5-OH-CLB concentrations at steady state were 3.2 and 2.4 ng/ml, respectively. The disposition of CLB was linear over the dose range 10-30 mg. CLB was metabolized to 5-OH-CLB in humans, and the principal route of metabolism was N-dealkylation.
