NET redistributable.Q: Is there a way to "create" a "selected" state in CSS? Is there a way to easily create a selected state within CSS? I would like to be able to say something like: button:active{ background:blue; color:white; } I know this can be easily achieved with images, but my alternative is to have a box around the button. A: You could use either: input { -webkit-appearance: none; -moz-appearance: none; appearance: none; border:0; } input:focus { outline:0; } ...or... label { -webkit-appearance: none; -moz-appearance: none; appearance: none; -webkit-box-shadow: 0 0 1px #999 inset; -moz-box-shadow: 0 0 1px #999 inset; box-shadow: 0 0 1px #999 inset; } ...which apply to the label child of the input. Though you should bear in mind that neither of these styles will work for native CSS3 selectors; thus, if you are targeting a particular browser or device, you might need to target a pseudo-class using a browser-specific selector (though I don't know which browsers support which). If you aren't looking to target native selectors, you could look at the accepted answer for this question on how to emulate native selected styling, or, if you absolutely must have a border, you could use border:1px solid black;. Other options include using images (which many people don't like, I realize), or using background images (which can be fiddly to get right). A: You can do: div.selected{ background:green; color:white; } to use it like this: foo or
