Seed Growth and Seedling Death: Variations in a Sub-Antarctic Fern Community. Observations of the seedling and sapling communities of Dryopteris affinis (C. Presl. & C. Presl. ex Willd.) Hook. var. glabrescens (Hook.) Holttst. & Rydb., a sub-Antarctic fern, were made during the spring and early summer of 1983. Analyses of the structure and dynamics of the seedling community revealed effects of past changes in precipitation on seedling establishment. Slight increases in seedlings were observed after low rainfall in 1978 and 1979. Following light frosts of 1983, however, seedling recruitment was reduced by 65 to 80% for the three sites sampled in the upper part of the catchment. A second factor affecting recruitment was the distribution of the seed bank, which was limited to a low-precipitation site. Establishment of the sapling community was more affected by precipitation during the summer than in the spring. In the upper catchment, saplings were absent between October 1973 and June 1975 but appeared in 1977 and 1978. Small numbers of saplings were present in 1983 and 1984. In recent years, a method for coating paper sheets with or paper-making process using a coating liquid obtained by adding a binder and the like to a coating composition in the form of an aqueous solution (hereinafter sometimes abbreviated as "coating

In this prospective study, family and medical records of a group of 116 infants at risk of failure in language development were reviewed to assess the proportion who did not have standard educational tests at age 3 years. Seventy-one infants were at risk primarily for delayed phonological processing, and 45 for delayed expressive language. Assessment of the children at age 3 years revealed 13 children who were delayed in language and who had significant risk factors, 11 who were delayed in language but whose risk factors were not significant and eight with neither delay. The study indicates that children with risk factors for delayed speech and language processing are unlikely to have normal outcomes, but with the appropriate intervention, some can achieve typical language levels.
