When I set one of the pins to be asleep (i.e. set the pin as input), the PIC goes into sleep mode. However, I haven't set any reset/wake-up pins. I've looked at the datasheet and the only time it says "activate reset", that is when you want to run code at boot (read data, then reset to be sure it's clean). When I don't program an interrupt routine at boot, and I'm trying to work with the peripheral, the PIC goes into sleep mode right away. Any thoughts as to why the PIC would go into sleep mode when one of the pins is set to be input? A: The bit of the datasheet you quote looks like it describes setting the clock as the default state. If you don't reset the PIC when you program it, the default is that at power up the internal oscillator clock is disabled, so the processor is not clocked. If you want to do some peripheral stuff at power-on, you need to set the clock to be
